

PROVED RIGHT!

Worsening economic crisis underlines need for nationalist policies

THE CHRISTMAS PERIOD brought home to Britain the reality that the nation is now sunk deeply enmeshed in a worsening economic crisis. At what is normally peak buying time just before festivities, most shops reported a dramatic slump in trade. In the meantime, repossession of homes by building societies reached such an alarming level that the Government, in a panic measure obviously designed to pacify the voters in the run-up to the general election, announced a 'rescue' scheme that would enable householders to stay in their homes by becoming tenants instead of mortgagees until their finances improved and they could resume buying their properties.

Unemployment has now hit 2½ million and is still on the rise — with economic observers forecasting that it will reach 3 million in 1992. The productivity of British industry is now down even on 1979, when the Tories took office, and businesses are going bankrupt at a record rate.

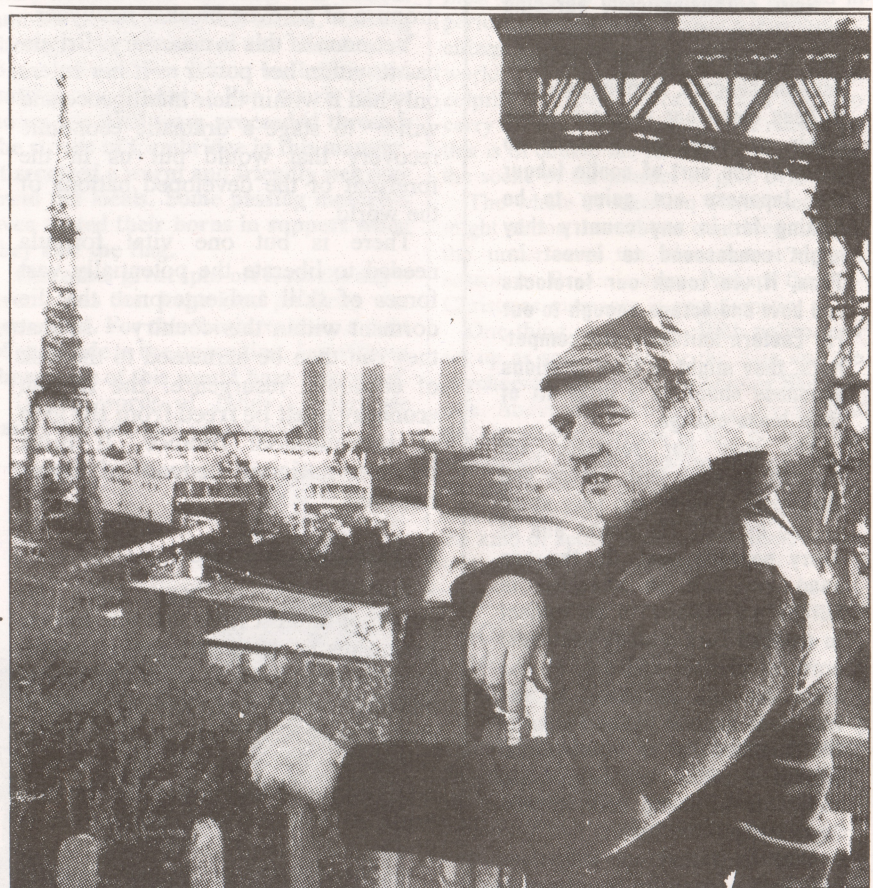

In the face of looming economic catastrophe, our Government, instead of manfully admitting that its economic policies have failed, can do nothing better than whine that most of the world is now in recession, and therefore Britain can do nothing to pull herself out of it. In fact this putting the blame on 'world recession' is a pathetic excuse for failure at home — for bad policies and bad leadership. Britain can indeed pull herself out of recession and stage a recovery, but not by adherence to the old internationalist policies by which decisions made abroad determine the health of British industry and the economic welfare of the British people. Only through economic nationalism can we again become a great industrial nation.

SO NOW ALL WE'RE FIT FOR IS CHEAP LABOUR

THIS PAPER yields to no-one in its opposition to the EC and all its works. Our track record speaks for itself.

But when John Major and the Tory press started trumpeting it as some sort of earth-shaking triumph that Britain had been spared the European Social Charter in the outcome of the Maastricht summit we certainly sat up and took note of their reasons for saying so.

According to them, we should rejoice because opting out of the Charter will hold down costs within our economy, mainly wage costs. As EC Supremo M. Jacques Delors put it, this would make our country a "paradise for Japanese investment."

And we should be thankful for THAT?

What an appalling comment on the level to which Britain has sunk!

We don't favour Euro-tyranny. We don't favour having Labour conditions dictated from Brussels. But we do believe in striving to raise the living standards of our workers so that they can compare with those found anywhere else in the world.

The reasons for Mr. Major, his Government and the Tories rejecting the Charter are that they do not give any priority to raising the British worker's standards of living. And, in addition, within the terms of their kind of thinking, they cannot do so. They have spent twelve years reducing this country to abysmal poverty compared with the rest of Europe and the developed world.

Once the seat of the Industrial Revolution, Britain under their rule has become an industrial desert. It is a country with very little real productive economy left, not least because the Tories have allowed foreign competition to wipe out our own firms.

Now, enthusiastically agreeing with Delors, they think that our only hope is to behave like international beggars, humbly agreeing to keep down our workers' wage levels as close as possible to those of the sort of coolie labour the Japanese are going to be looking for in any country they might condescend to invest in. Then, if we touch our forelocks and bow and scrape enough to our Far Eastern imitators and competitors, they might in their gracious goodness chuck us a little bit of their loose change.

The way our relations are shaping up with both Europe and the world at large, we now stand to end up with the worst end of every possible deal. On the one hand we will be shackled to Europe sufficiently to be subject to endless Euro-tyranny over vast areas of our national life. On the other we will be bound by the free-trade dogmas of the Tories to the conditions of an international market in which low wages and standards of living will increasingly become the norm.

Why is it that our politicians will never stand up for the only course a proud and honourable nation can possibly follow: namely to live in sovereign independence by our own energy, inventiveness, enterprise and capital? This is the way Britain became a world leader in the past.

If Britain were to be rebuilt along those lines, industrially and in other ways, there would be nothing to stop her equalling and excelling the productivity and high standards of the Continent.

THE RECESSION: OUR ANSWER

Unemployment, high interest rates and inflation are not necessary; they can all be overcome by resolute national measures

ONE of the enduring memories of the recent Christmas period was the sight of repeated TV adverts broadcast on behalf of the large department stores reminding everyone of the huge discounts available if they came to the January sales. Quite clearly, these stores had a very large amount of unwanted stock that needed clearing, so disappointing had business been in the pre-Christmas run-up.

This was just one small symptom of the massive recession now hitting Britain — a recession that becomes more stark and more obvious with every fresh declaration by Chancellor Lamont that it is now coming to an end and that 'recovery' is on the way.

Britain ended 1991 with the jobless total up to 2½ million, business bankruptcies hitting new records and increasing numbers of families facing repossession of their homes through their inability to meet the scandalous interest rises on their mortgages. For great numbers in this country, it was indeed a bleak Christmas — with the money going abroad, largely to finance our foreign competitors.

But if such curbs were introduced, and British money kept in Britain by the determined action of government, the rise in interest rates overseas would not affect us. We could adjust our national rate in accordance with the needs of our own economy. That is the first requirement if we are to bring the rate of borrowing down.

The second excuse offered by the Government is that interest rates must be kept high specifically to discourage borrowing — because, according to 'orthodox' financial thinking, it is borrowing that sends up inflation.

In fact that is only true under the present financial system. It is true because the only method the Government has to get the economy going, and it is our way — the nationalist way.

Why nationalist? Because such a policy, as a first requirement, necessitates, as stated before, freedom from the international financial system and the creation of a truly national system. The present banking structure and financial institutions in Britain are almost wholly international; for them to work properly for our country they must be made national. And that can only be accomplished by a government that is prepared to make itself the master of finance rather than serve as the lackey of finance.

INDUSTRY

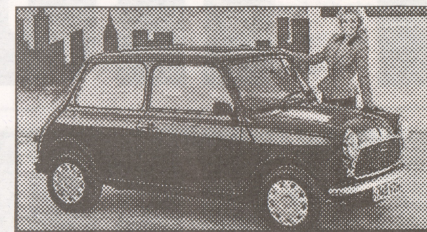

We have said that money must be created, debt-free, in quantities equal to the increase in real national wealth that is possible with industry working "at full stretch." But industry can only work at full stretch if it has an assured market for which to produce. As long as British industry is at the mercy of the international system this will never be possible. Over the past 20 years, and particularly over the past decade, British manufacturing — the main basis of our once-powerful economy — has been decimated by uncontrolled imports. British industry is now stagnant because the British consumer, in so far as he has money in his pocket to buy anything at all, is buying it from foreigners. In addition to this, what is left of British industry itself is equipped very largely by machines bought from abroad instead of machines made in Britain — so that it is, in effect, self-destructing with every year that goes by.

If British industry is to be saved, all this must change.

The needs of Britain's consumers, and of Britain's factories in the way of the machinery of production, must be met from the produce of British industry itself. This means very simply that foreign products must be progressively excluded from the British market while our own industrial capacity is built up to fill the gap. The final target must be a British market that is provided for exclusively by the produce of British factories.

This policy, apart from making possible a vast increase in the gross national product (GNP), and thereby providing the basis for a vast increase in the money supply, would accomplish something more. It would enable us to put back to work the whole of the 2½ million people in our country now sitting idle. And with those people back in work we would have 2½ million (in fact many more when families are considered) with much greater purchasing power in their pockets whereby they could consume the produce of industry.

BRITISH WORLD-BEATER

The Mini. The enormous success of this small car showed that British motor manufacturers can achieve the best, given proper support from government. In fact all the motor vehicles on our roads should be British-made.

But such a policy demands, again, a fundamental change from present doctrine: it demands a departure from internationalism and the adoption of nationalism.

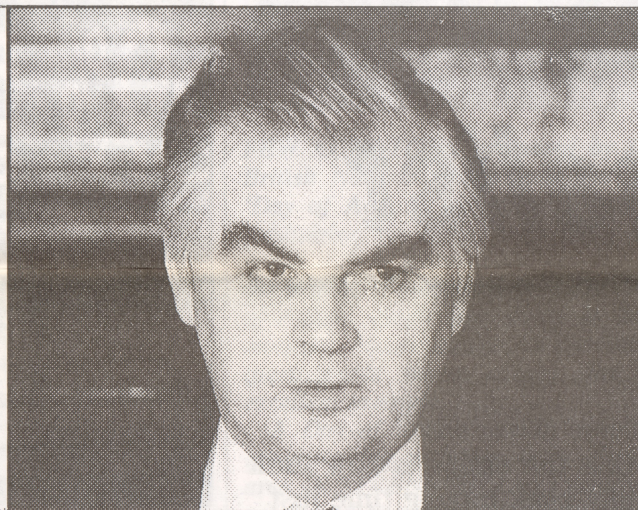

For consumer power to buy the products of British industry rather than those of foreign industry means, first of all protection — a policy which keeps foreign products out by act of government. This in turn means the repudiation of numerous existing international agreements whereby Britain is pledged to keep her market open for foreign exporters. The most important of these is the Treaty of Rome, which ties Britain to membership of the European Community. Britain must quit the EC, just as she must abandon other international commitments which tie her hands when it comes to safeguarding her own industries against foreign penetration.

These are the main cornerstones of the national policy that is needed to regenerate the British economy. Space does not permit the exploration of further detail, but the subject is covered more comprehensively in A New Way Forward, the policy booklet explaining the political objectives of the British National Party (see page 6) and The Eleventh Hour, by John Tyndall, (available from the BNP Bookshop at £12.50 for paperback including postage and packing).

The essence of the argument is summarised in our leader column on the left of this page: Britain must live in sovereign independence by her own energy, inventiveness, enterprise and promise of an even bleaker new year.

Yet none of this is necessary. Britain has it within her power — if her rulers only had it within their intelligence and will — to stage a dramatic economic recovery that would put us in the forefront of the developed nations of the world.

There is but one vital formula needed to liberate the potentially vast forces of skill and enterprise that lie dormant within this country — so that they can then be harnessed to the task of economic resurgence: the British economy must be freed from the grip of international finance. It must become national instead of international.

INTEREST RATES

Let us take, to begin with, the crippling interest rates that are driving businesses to the wall, driving householders from their homes and depriving other consumers of the purchasing power needed to keep the high street tills rolling. Why do these interest rates need to be so excessive? There are two explanations that the Government offers, and neither are valid.

The first is that interest rates in Britain are tied to the world's money markets. If the rate increases in the United States or Germany, British banks have no alternative but to put up theirs too — otherwise money will leave this country to be invested abroad where returns will be greater. If banks are going to pay their depositors higher returns, they must in turn impose higher charges on borrowers.

That all seems to make sense — for just as long as Britain is tied to the international money system under which no curbs are placed on British ment is prepared to adopt to create more money to fuel the economy is that of borrowing it from the banks. The banks, in their turn, make their 'loans' simply by creating money out of nothing and then 'lending' it to business, to the Government or local authorities and to the individual — all at interest. Obviously, the more of such 'lending' there is the more interest is owing. This interest has to be written into the price of every item of goods or services for sale. Hence growing inflation.

But none of this is necessary. Government could itself create the money necessary to fuel an expanding economy on a basis that is debt-free and without interest. It could assess the economic expansion of which industry is capable working at full stretch, and then it could create the money required to make that expansion possible. As long as the growth in real wealth resulting from such expansion is equal to the growth in the money supply, its creation is not inflationary. That is the

If our present rulers have their way, it is increasingly going to make our laws and decide our policies. If Britain is to undergo a proper economic recovery, she must break free of Europe and become master of her own fate.

STOP THIS VILE ASSAULT ON OUR KIDS!

ONCE AGAIN, the multi-racialists are picking on our kids as the targets for their evil tyranny. This time the intended victims are Hampshire schoolchildren.

Hampshire County Council has introduced vicious 'Big Brother' methods into its 700 schools in order to intimidate white pupils into submission. The names of 'racist' children are to be recorded on 'racial incident sheets' with a view to the possible suspension or expulsion from school of British youngsters who react in any way against the multi-racial new order.

They are now liable to find themselves listed for a whole range of special 'offences', from all-out physical assaults on ethnic minority pupils down to mere name-calling with a racial content.

Schools of course already have a quite adequate machinery for dealing with trouble between their pupils if it gets out of hand.

Hampshire's Education Inspector John Morris doesn't see fit to explain why anything further is needed, nor in what way an insult or assault is any the worse because it has some racial content. Nor does he explain why, as seems to be the proposal, it is only young Whites who are to be pilloried as 'racists'.

Perhaps he agrees with the headmaster of the Hounslow school who three years ago told parents of a young white lad who was assaulted, terrorised and stabbed by an Asian gang at his school, after being called 'white trash', that "you can't be racist against a white person."

Parents' horror

At any rate, parents' leaders in Hampshire are reacting with horror. Fred Naylor of Britain's School Watch group did not accept Mr. Morris's idea that it was any more serious for one child, for example, to call another 'Nigger' or 'Paki' than to abuse him as 'Fatty'. Kids will be kids, and one form of insult used by them is really no worse than another.

Mr. Naylor went on to say of the whole idea of blacklisting children in this way: "It seems the day has arrived when Big Brother is watching over the playground. Black children are being given the opportunity to cry 'racist' even if they are the guilty party."

There can be no doubt that this new sneak's charter is part of a growing strategy aiming to manipulate, brainwash and frighten British youngsters into knuckling under to multi-racialism, right across the board.

At one time it was only lunatic left Labour local authorities who engaged in this sort of thing. But Tory and Liberal Democratic councils out in the leafy shires have been enthusiastically getting in on the act for some time. Hampshire, where ethnic minority pupils make up only 6 per-cent of the school population, is only the latest to go along.

Secret police methods

As long ago as 1988 Hertfordshire introduced secret police-style methods of monitoring, intimidation and control over children as young as three and four at kindergarten, in order to stamp out the alleged 'racism' of young Whites, despite the lack of any real evidence of 'racial harassment' in the county's schools.

The aim would seem to be to cripple young Whites psychologically by turning them away from any idea of thinking or acting on behalf of their own land and people in the face of the waves of coloured immigration which the powers that be have unleashed upon Britain.

This malignant new policy is no doubt intended to operate hand-in-glove with the kind of 'multi-cultural' brainwashing of our youngsters now taking place in the classrooms — not least in Hampshire — as part of the Tory Government's 'national curriculum'. British children are already starting to lose their awareness of their national heroes, their national culture and their national folkways as teaching is focused more and more on those of the 'Third World', a process visible even in overwhelmingly white schools in white areas.

One thing is for sure. There can be no pit of eternal fire deep enough to roast the kind of people who plot the ruination of Britain through the indoctrination and persecution of her young folk.

This vile assault on our kids must be stopped.

Major scraping the barrel for votes

JOHN MAJOR now seems to have become quite shameless. He doesn't appear to care how low he sinks in what is now obviously a quest for votes at any price.

Recently he received queer actor and 'gay Rights' campaigner Ian McKellen, amid a blaze of publicity, at No. 10 Downing Street. McKellen emphasised that the Prime Minister had been keen to hold the discussion that took place between the two.

McKellen brought with him in his handbag a veritable shopping list of demands. He wanted the age of consent for queers to be lowered from 21 to 16, thus making it the same as for normal people. He wanted homosexual 'marriages' to be legally recognised. He wanted police attitudes to homos to be monitored by the Home Office, the armed forces to allow 'gay' sex among their members (as recommended by parliament's select committee on defence) and for queers to get the same whole lot.

This is not surprising. McKellen says that all three big parties "are beginning to suspect that supporting improved homosexual rights is a vote-winner, not a loser."

He may well be right. Dr. Adrian Rogers, an Exeter GP and campaigner against homosexuality, has expressed concern over the growth of homo perversion across Britain.

Meanwhile it is becoming evident that the Tory Party, for all its past public posturing as a defender of traditional values, moral standards and public decency, is now as lacking in any genuine will to stand up for these things as is Labour and the Liberal Democrats, both of which are now clamouring for 16-year-olds to be allowed to indulge in homosexual perversion.

Like the other main parties, the Tories too just dance to the tune of the best organised and most loud-mouthed pressure groups, no matter how debased and degenerate the causes they speak for.

It is very noticeable that while Mr. Major bent over backwards to be seen associating with the likes of McKellen he didn't balance things up by receiving any spokesman for the contrary point of view, despite the fact that this is still much closer to the natural instincts of the majority of British people. The Prime Minister did not even deign to receive Dr. Rogers, who, as head of the Conservative Family Campaign, is a member and supporter of his own party!

It is worth remembering in all this that the Conservative Party, just as much as its opponents, has a 'Gay Rights' mafia in its very own ranks. Sacked Tory MP Harvey Proctor, disgraced a while back after being prosecuted over homosexual antics with a male prostitute, revealed three years ago that in parliament itself there was no shortage of queers — and that this was a thoroughly cross-bench phenomenon.

WHERE DOES IT STOP?

If the limp-wristed freemasonry reaches right the way up to these dizzy heights in the national life then can there be anywhere where its influence is not to be found? No doubt it infests every nook and cranny of every key institution with which our self-seeking politicians think it necessary to ingratiate themselves in order to hang on to office — the mass media, for example, whose bias can make or break them.

If McKellen and his ilk get their way there'll be nowhere it doesn't reach at any level of society.

Meanwhile, as Dr. Rogers points out, decent society foots the bill. Freedom for 'gays' is a licence for them to recruit young people into their sickening cult who otherwise might well never go that way at all, who might without homo pressure go on to lead normal family lives.

As things are, the incidence of AIDS is expected to explode tenfold in the next few years — and this is only the most blatant social consequence of the massive growth in homo deviancy to which Dr. Rogers refers.

Homosexuality, he says, is a "sterile, disease-ridden and God-forsaken relationship between human beings. Although it must, by and large, accept responsibility for the AIDS virus, it was causing unpleasant illnesses long before that was discovered. It is also condemned as sinful by all the major religions." He might also have added that homosexuality is a sin against nature.

This is why, as he remarks, for the common good, "instead of changing the law in favour of gays, Mr. Major should make it tougher." But there is small hope of that whilst Britain's political life is dominated by the outlook of obsessive, self-serving, vote-cadging spivvory that goes inevitably with 'liberal democracy' and is incarnate in a politician such as the present Prime Minister, whose party label doesn't make his pattern of thinking much different, if at all, from that of his opponents.

SCHOOL ABILITY: THE RACE FACTOR THEY TRY TO IGNORE

THE DAILY MAIL, in a special feature on the 20th December, published 'league tables' showing the academic performance of seven-year-olds in schools coming under the various education authorities in England (statistics for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland were not given). The clear purpose of the exercise was to demonstrate that the best results were being achieved in Tory-controlled areas — or at least areas not under Labour control (it must be remembered that the Daily Mail is very much a Tory paper).

According to the tables, the seven areas with the best performance were Richmond-on-Thames (Liberal Democrat), Bromley, Harrow, Hertfordshire and West Sussex (Conservative) and North Yorkshire and Havering (in each case the education authorities not being under the overall control of any party).

At the bottom of the tables were listed the five worst areas, namely Birmingham, Walsall, Sandwell, Newham (East London) and Bradford — in that order. All of these are Labour-controlled areas. In the section immediately above them were thirteen areas, also all Labour controlled. These were, in descending order: Bolton, Cleveland, Hammersmith & Fulham, Knowsley (Merseyside), Manchester, Newcastle upon Tyne, Barnsley, Islington, Dudley, Greenwich, Rochdale, Southwark and Hackney (the last two being Inner London boroughs). It was stated that two more Inner London boroughs, Lambeth and Tower Hamlets (both Labour-controlled) failed to submit any figures — from which it should be presumed that those figures were among the worst.

The writer of the report in question, Mail Education Correspondent another message, perhaps even more important.

This might be drawn from the fact that the seven areas showing the best results among seven-year-olds were all overwhelmingly white in population, while the eighteen areas with the poorest performance are in the vast majority of cases known to have very large ethnic minorities, in some cases the largest being Asian and in others West Indian.

Very probably, the poor results shown by the areas with large Asian components are not entirely due to low performance in the classroom by capital. She must not wait for the rest of the world to drag her out of her mess. She must not blame the rest of the world for her own failure. She must, as in the past, take her destiny into her own hands. That is the way of nationalism. That is the only way to a prosperous future!

The great Tory 'refugee' spoof

The continued importation of alien population elements into Europe and North America can now be clearly recognised as a gigantic, well planned and costly para-military operation, much of it routed through East Germany, the main staging post for bogus refugees flown in Soviet airliners from the Far East and elsewhere; from East Germany they are pushed out in busloads into West Germany, Denmark, Holland and Switzerland, and in boatloads across the Baltic into Sweden and Norway, to be further distributed by all kinds of illegal means into Britain and across the Atlantic to Canada and the United States of America. Anyone who believes that all this could be the result of an exercise of personal initiative by the migrants, and all that at their own expense, would have to be naive to the point of weak-mindedness.

Ivor Benson in Behind the News
(Written in the mid-1980s)

FACED with a dicey election and a British electorate worried, with good cause, about the never-ending black, brown and yellow flood into this country, the Tories have been trying to con the people that they have some plan for putting an end to this invasion. For this purpose they and their tame press have been trying to focus public attention on one tiny area of the problem, namely those aliens, mainly Afro-Asians, who try to gatecrash Britain in the guise of 'political refugees' when in fact they are mere economic bounty-hunters coming to this country in search of the meal ticket they've been led to believe (not without reason) is available here.

Mr. Major and his Government want British people to believe that they are going to comb out the phony refugees from the 'genuine' ones. They also plainly want the people to think that this will have some far-reaching effect in putting a stop to the Afro-Asian swamping of Britain.

In face of the law as it stands, just how effective the Tories are ever likely to be, even in the limited task of stemming the refugee flood, was perhaps most vividly exposed by the way in which Home Secretary Kenneth Baker came a cropper in the Appeal Court over the kicking out of a would-be immigrant from Zaire, who fled to this country claiming to have been tortured. Baker was found guilty of contempt of court, fined thousands of pounds and loaded with costs over the sending back of the Zairean to whence he came.

The Zairean had already been sent home when a legal order came through from the court that he should be allowed to return to Britain pending full consideration of his case. Baker was said to have defied the order and cancelled the man's flight back to this country.

This means that, if he is ever located back in his homeland, he will be allowed to fly straight back here at the cost of the British taxpayer.

This was only the latest in a string of farces.

SOFT TOUCH

Just now, it seems, practically the whole of Zaire, the huge Central African territory that once used to be known as the Belgian Congo, is starting to cotton on to what a soft touch Britain is. Immigration officials suspect that large numbers of Zaireans and other African immigrants claiming to be Zaireans, all with forged documents, are now piling in — although the Government is withholding sufficient resources from the immigration service for the latter to prove it.

Five years ago there were almost no Zaireans trying to get into Britain. But in the Spring of this year no fewer than 4,000 turned up claiming the 'right of asylum'.

This is reckoned to be only the tip of an iceberg. Many more just slip into the country on tourist and student visas and disappear into the immigrant communities that the present Government, like all its predecessors, has allowed to become established and shows no sign of wishing to remove.

As things stand, there are now 55,000 asylum applications, mainly gratitude for what they have received. One, nicknamed 'Mr. Zaire' by immigration officials, used his waiting period of two years for Home Office permission to stay to claim social security benefits under 50 aliases at 50 addresses in South London. It was reckoned that he had a full-time job just cashing the cheques, which brought him an annual income equivalent to some £350,000! 'Mr. Zaire' was eventually caught, but most of his kind are not.

GOVERNMENT INACTION

Despite bland words of assurance to the voters, the Government is doing nothing to stop this madness. Britain is in her present pickle because she signed the 1951 UN Convention on Refugees. This is at the root of the so-from Third World gatecrashers, gathering dust at a Home Office building in Croydon. It would take years to process them, with officialdom and the courts engaged in the fool's errand of trying to establish whether each individual claimant is a 'genuine' refugee from political 'persecution' in his homeland or not.

But in practice the civil service procedure is much more cavalier. As one staff member was quoted as saying, every so often there is a 'file-clearing' exercise. Officials are paid a bonus for 'getting rid' of a problem. Nowadays applications from immigrants who have left countries where there is political trouble are from time to time simply rubber-stamped and let in.

It's all much easier than fighting the lawyers who are making fortunes by campaigning on behalf of aliens who claim to be victims of torture and the like. Footing the bill for the latter, meanwhile, is the British taxpayer who 1988. But then his lawyers took the case to the Euro-Court in Strasbourg, which ruled that he had a case against Britain.

He was allowed back here in 1989 and given leave to stay until 1992, pending completion of his appeal in Europe. A European legal commission in Strasbourg ruled that although he was not a genuine refugee from persecution Britain had nevertheless denied him his so-called 'right' of an effective remedy against deportation and he could take his case to the Court of Human Rights.

Skandarajah lost his case, but he is still living in this country, where he has a good job and a smart house he could not dream of back home. His brother, too, has now joined him, likewise claiming political asylum.

Skandarajah's lawyers have now launched a new claim for asylum. This may take up to two years to complete.

This man has in the meantime cost the British taxpayer some £23,500 in called 'obligation' she now has to take in the Third World's waifs and strays. The Tories have no plan to repudiate this convention. Until this is done, the flood of illegal immigrants will continue and grow, with those who come here staying on whilst the authorities go through the futile charade of trying to distinguish between one type of Afro-Asian gatecrasher and another.

In fact, the Government does not really seem to be serious at all about stemming the flow. Of late, would-be asylum-seekers going to the West have been using Moscow as a staging post. Travelling on forged documents, these people, mainly Africans, are carried to Heathrow by Aeroflot, the Soviet airline. Under Mr. Baker's milk-and-water regulations, introduced amid much publicity a short time ago, this should render this carrier liable to heavy fines. Aeroflot, however, refuses to pay up.

The Government claims it cannot get the money for fear of damaging trade and other relations with the Soviet Union (or whatever its successor countries may be). In fact, the latter are now basket cases which are currently begging Britain and the West for aid. There is nothing whatever to stop this country and others from denying that aid to the beggars if they continue such a practice.

But our Government is not known to have any plans to take any of these minimal steps. The Tory image as Britain's defenders against the alien flood is no better than a cynical spoof against the British public.

Controlling 'Illegals'

PAUL JOHNSON in his article "Immigration and the menace of fascism" (October 6) describes the illness well enough but offers no cure.

As a matter of practical policing, it is impossible for Britain to operate any form of effective immigration control while the following conditions obtain:

(1) We retain membership of the EEC; (2) political asylum is granted; (3) mass tourism is tolerated; (4) permission to study in Britain is virtually uncontrolled; (5) large immigrant communities exist in Britain.

Condition (1) effectively removes immigration control from Britain's hands; condition (2) allows increasingly large numbers to enter this country, supposedly temporarily but, in reality, permanently; conditions (3) and (4) provide ample opportunity for illegal immigration; condition (5) offers illegal immigrants safe havens, restricts the effectiveness of police and customs because they are afraid of charges of racism and possible widespread civil unrest and, most importantly, weakens the will of the government to act.

The stark reality is that nothing can be done unless a British government accepts that the problem cannot be resolved simply by trying to keep the lid on the racial pressure cooker by means of soft words and irresponsible policies such as policing by "consent". What is needed, and this is what people like Mr Johnson always shy away from, is the compulsory repatriation of those who are, as anyone who has to live and work amongst them knows, no more than strangers in a strange land.

If Britain had to act alone, such a policy might be impossible. However, fears of mass immigration are growing rapidly on the Continent (and not just in the EEC). What is needed is joint action with as many European countries as possible. This I believe, is rapidly becoming practical politics.

IT'S now the worldwide trend. Wherever you go, 'multi-ethnic' states are breaking up.

In what used to be the Soviet Union every racial and national group now seems to want to go its own way, and most are now doing so. It's the same in Yugoslavia, where Croats, Slovenes and Macedonians have had enough of being forced, as they have been for 70 years, into a multi-ethnic state — especially one which for the last 46 years has been held together by communist oppression and effectively dominated by the Serbs, for whom no love is lost.

But it isn't just in the former Marxist East that the trend has taken hold. It is now spreading to the West, ruled until now by the equally false ideology of 'liberalism', which has tried to preach that the races of the world are "all the same" — contrary to all experience, all history, all reality and all natural human feeling.

RACE WAR IN NEW YORK

Now the lie is being given to this drive right in the midst of one of the liberals' global heartlands — New York City.

With the outbreak of massive violence last August between Jews and Negroes in the city, things have taken quite a turn since the days back in the 1960s when Jewish 'civil rights' activists, using creatures of theirs like Martin Luther King as their front-man and stooge, forced legislation through in the United States to outlaw racial segregation and compel Americans to accept Blacks in all spheres of their national life.

Instead of just affecting white Americans, the whole thing seems to have boomeranged on some of its authors.

When a Jew ran over two black children after jumping a red light whilst driving through Brooklyn, all hell broke loose. Gangs of black teenagers took to the streets, one of them stabbing Hasidic Jew Yankel Rosenbloom to death.

Matters weren't improved when a rumour got around among the rampaging Negroes that the Jewish crew of an ambulance called to the scene of the original accident had tended only Jews and had ignored Blacks.

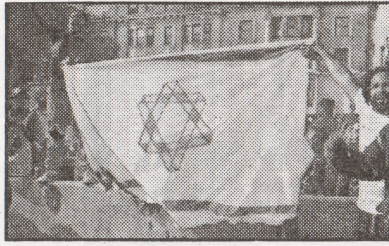

Days of riots, arson and looting followed as Blacks and Jews fought on the streets. The local Hasidic headquarters was put under siege by enraged Negroes, who burned Jewish flags and carried placards proclaiming: "Hitler didn't finish the job." Groaned Jewish city councillor Noah Dear: "This is Nazi Germany all over again."

BLACKS BEAT JEW

Meanwhile, it didn't help the likes of Jewish liberal author Jimmy Breslin that he'd spent years bleating on behalf of black causes. It seems that he was dragged from his taxi by Negro rioters, beaten up and robbed even of the shirt off his back. As a final indignity, he seems to have been left by his attackers bruised and battered, and stark naked apart from his underpants.

The physical aggravation seems to have been paralleled by quite a war of words between Blacks and Jews, going back some time. Negro professor Leonard Jeffries stated in a lecture played repeatedly over New York TV that Jews financed the slave trade and controlled Hollywood.

More questionable was his claim that Hollywood was in on some sort of a conspiracy to denigrate Blacks. This will come as news to anyone familiar with the international film industry's average output, most of which is, if anything, systematically anti-white and is constantly portraying Negroes in upper-middle class and 'professional' roles in which in real life they are very rarely represented.

SYMBOLIC PROTEST
New York Blacks burn makeshift Israeli flag

But all the same, relations have come to a pretty pass when slanging of this type is the order of the day — particularly when it is between such races as the Blacks and Jews.

JEW ATTACKS BLACKS

Nor have Jews been exactly muted. Perhaps losing his cool, Jewish professor Michael Levin of New York's City College let slip a few comments on the nature of local black crime of a type which he and his kind would once have avoided. These came some time before the August riots but clearly show the way that inter-tribal relations between Blacks and Jews had already been deteriorating amid the ethnic realities of the city.

In a lecture, Dr. Levin said that special precautions against Blacks were justified. As an example, if a nocturnal jogger comes across a young black man, "based on statistics cited earlier (that one in four black males is jailed at some point), you must regard it as 25 per cent certain that he is a felon. It is therefore rational to take into account the possibility that he means to attack you...you are entitled to run the other way."

Dr. Levin denied that his remarks were offensive to Blacks. "Black criminals," he said, "are to blame for the innocent Black's chagrin, and what resentment he feels should be directed that them."

So, what price multi-racialism now? New York was supposed to be an example to all of a harmonious show-piece racial melting pot, but instead it is shaping up to become like a mini-Yugoslavia, with some of the melting pot promoters themselves front-line targets of the violence.

Nor are Jews and Blacks the only ones to be slugging it out on the city's streets. In the multi-ethnic patchwork that is emerging, and amid the AIDS-ridden urban blight that has gone with this process where Whites are now a minority, what was once a part of Anglo-Saxon America has become a battleground for many alien groups.

New York has too often set the stage for America's future, and America for our future. It is well that multi-racialism and the melting pot should be on the way out. But in Britain we should be hoping that the process will take the form of a peaceful and orderly return to an all-white country, instead of escalating into the mayhem we have seen in the United States. Unhappily, developments in many of our towns and cities since the beginning of the 1980s have served as warnings to us that a great deal of bloodshed may occur before our rulers get the message that multi-racialism does not work — does not work in America, does not work here, does not work anywhere.

RACE, CRIME CENSORSHIP AND THE MEDIA

Covering up the truth

WITH the race riots in Britain in 1991 the mass media have gone into overdrive to cover up the connection between race and crime. In any incident where the culprits happen to be black, you really have to search the newspapers thoroughly to get the facts — and even then you may not get them!

Only one major daily paper managed to tell the whole truth about the vicious attack in September by a knife-wielding maniac on three WPCs and a police sergeant in Wood Green, North London. The three girl cops were slashed and stabbed when they tried to move on a man who was causing a public disturbance in a market place. Brave sergeant John Davison was seriously wounded when he moved in to help his colleagues and arrest the troublemaker, whom he kept hold of even after being stabbed.

Only The Sun saw fit to tell the public that the berserk knife man, known locally as the 'God Freak', was a West Indian. The Sun was also the only paper to quote a market stallholder who said: "When the man was stabbing the police, he said things like: 'I'm a black man, and you load are like this with black people.'"

It seems also that when police reinforcements turned up on the scene they met with some hostility from some of the 'locals' — which only stopped as "details of the bloodbath began to circulate."

Police becoming targets

The Sun report said little more. But this detail fits in with a comment in a recent report buried on the inside pages of the London Evening Standard in connection with the rampage on the multi-racial Blackbird Leys estate in Oxford, describing how police in general are becoming targets for violence from both individual criminals and mobs when they try to enforce the law.

Says crime correspondent Roger Graef: "If they make an arrest, a hostile crowd is sure to gather, often including the parents of the accused." Graef quotes one bobby as saying: "They hate us. They really hate us, especially the coloureds. It's inbred in them."

In the same report Graef spoke of there now being "many unreported incidents in different parts of Britain" of police being targets of attack. What percentage of these attacks is by ethnic minorities he did not specify, but the fact that they have been, as he acknowledges, "unreported" is strongly suggestive of coloured involvement, especially when we bear in mind that a short time ago newspaper editors signed an agreement drawn up by the Press Council in which they undertook not to report the race of offenders involved in lawbreaking incidents unless it was seen to be essential in its relevance to the story.

Terroriser of women

Only the Daily Telegraph made it plain that a rapist known as the 'Night Creeper', who terrorised women in their homes in the Woolwich and Charlton areas of South London was black. So-called 'creeping terror' Ian Smith, jailed last Autumn for 20 years, stole into the houses of women on their own, robbed them and then raped them at knifepoint. In a number of cases he threatened their small children with harm if they did not submit to him, and in one case he raped a woman who told him she had cancer of the womb.

Hidden away on the inside pages of the London Evening Standard was a report of an apparently motiveless stabbing on a tube train at Shepherd's Bush, West London, last September. Only the fact that the first policewoman on the scene chanced to be a trained nurse saved the life of the victim, who asked for his name to be withheld. The young man was travelling home when, from out of the blue, a black male came up to him, abusing and threatening him before stabbing him in the chest. A police spokesman said: "What is particularly unpleasant is that the attack could have happened to anyone."

PONDERABLE QUOTE

It was no exaggeration to say that to unmask the equalitarian dogma was to knock the bottom out of both communism and socialism. Neither could survive without it because both drew their major nourishment from supposedly unwarranted economic and social inequalities among men.

Carlton Putnam (Race and Reality)

If incidents like these continue to get the kind of silent treatment that now seems to be the norm it is hard to see how the problem of collapsing law and order in modern Britain can ever be successfully tackled. As a minimum condition of this,

THE 'NIGHT CREEPER'
Terrorised women in South London. Only the Daily Telegraph had the honesty to report that he was black.

every single fact relevant to it needs to be spelt out if the nature of the problem is even to be properly grasped.

Public's 'right to know'

Meanwhile, many are asking what has happened to the much vaunted "right of the public to know" that Britain's 'exposed' journalists are for ever waxing so eloquent about.

During August Bank Holiday brilliant Cambridge scientist Dr. Nicholas Hanscombe bled to death after being stabbed through a main artery in the groin whilst at the Notting Hill Carnival with his girlfriend. Once again, only The Sun made it at all clear that this happened after he got into an argument with a gang of black youths.

It would seem that Dr. Hanscomb, a high-powered expert on molecular biology and genetic engineering, was nevertheless not sufficiently educated in the ways of the world to know that Whites especially are well advised to keep away from the Notting Hill Carnival — almost annually the scene of knifings, including a number of killings, and occasionally of race riots against police.

If, over the years, the operatives of the media had carried out their self-appointed role as truthful public informers, instead of acting as hired hacks and censors on behalf of the multi-racial new order as they have been doing, maybe the likes of poor Dr. Hanscomb would not have been so ignorant. Perhaps he and his great talents would still be with us today.

YOUR LETTERS

Sir, — At the recent Middle East peace talks the Syrian delegate produced a photograph of Israeli Premier Yitzhak Shamir. The photo was accompanied by documents proving that Shamir was wanted by the British authorities for terrorist activities during World War II.

The Syrian delegate is not the first to accuse Shamir of being a terrorist because in the July 1990 issue of British Nationalist there was an article pointing to the same fact, and this article was accompanied by the same photo as that produced by the Syrian delegate at the peace talks.

As we should all know, the barons of the 'British' press did not, and would not ever, publish this information. Therefore I should like to congratulate British Nationalist on exposing the truth about Shamir's background.

Sir, — "Robert Maxwell, whom we loved and knew

On earth as Mr. Montague, Will probably be known in hell As Mr. Moses Samuel. For though they do not sound the same, Izzy Isaacs is his real name."

With apologies to Hillaire Belloc (MP 1900). He too got a little fed up with the Central European gentlemen making fortunes and anglicising their names (and buying titles). Nothing has changed!

MELTING POT BOILS OVER
New York City: Police clash with Blacks rioting against Jews

Green light for the underworld?

A WAVE of assaults on London police officers followed hard on the heels of the acquittal of the 'Tottenham Three'. The weekend following the overturning of the conviction of Winston Silcott, and the freeing of Mark Braithwaite and Engin Raghip pending appeal, over the murder of PC Blakelock in the course of the 1985 Riot on the Broadwater Farm Estate saw vicious knife attacks on three officers within a two-day period.

On the Friday, Sergeant George King was stabbed to death in Walthamstow, East London, when he went to investigate suspicious behaviour. The very next day, PCs Harold Castrey and John Jenkinson were slashed by a knife-wielding thug whilst on patrol in South London. A surgeon in the Croydon hospital where the two officers were treated said: "Both men suffered a terrible ordeal. Their injuries are among the nastiest I have ever seen." PC Castrey came within an ace of bleeding to death from a deep and gaping neck wound.

In the following weeks the wave of murderous savagery continued. Off duty detective Jim Morris was stabbed to death in the heart of Central London's shopping districts when he tackled a criminal.

To round off the pre-Christmas criminal offensive against police, Sergeant Alan Jones was blasted in the hip and groin at point-blank range with a handgun by two men in a car when he pulled their vehicle over during a routine traffic check in the Paddington area.

With our bobbies now suffering death and injury at this rate in what is now coming to read more and more like a list of battlefield casualties, it now seems as if the underworld of society believes it has a virtual green light.

Of course, these elements have been getting ever bolder for at least a decade. A

END-OF-YEAR RALLY SETS TEMPO FOR COMING ELECTION

THE ENDING of a highly successful year for the British National Party was marked by a Yuletide rally and social held in Bethnal Green in the East End of London on Saturday, the 14th November. Nearly 100 London activists turned up for this joint event, and a most enjoyable time was had by all.

The serious side of the business was conducted first, and it was standing room only when local organiser Eddy

Butler took the chair and called the meeting to order. In his capacity as Elections Officer, Mr. Butler called for all activists to be put on standby, ready for a general election in the first part of the coming year, and stressed the importance of all activists taking a day off work on polling day to help with electioneering.

The speaker to follow was Richard Edmonds, who is also the party's candidate for Bethnal Green & Stepney. A local speaker, Steve Smith, then took the floor. Steve had gained excellent results in Tower Hamlets Council elections. He was followed by Steve Tyler, the party's candidate for Southwark & Bermondsey. The finale was a fine speech by BNP Chairman John Tyndall, who is also the party's candidate for nearby Bow & Poplar. The main theme of Mr. Tyndall's important speech was the need for the BNP to project a sound public image and for some individuals to put aside any particular cults and fads in which they may have indulged themselves in the past. It was made clear that as the party grows and prospers its membership must be single-minded and disciplined, while also tidy of appearance — for these are the only ways in which future growth and public support can be assured.

A collection and raffles raised £250 clear profit, which went towards the local branch's election fund.

Immediately after the rally a very enjoyable social was held, with a good buffet. All who attended went away determined that 1992 would bring the BNP even greater success.

Victory at Cambridge

SATURDAY, December 7th, was the date selected by the BNP Eastern Region to hold its first major activity in Cambridge. The activity, a mass distribution of leaflets, was the sort of routine event that occurs all the time throughout Britain. The plan of action was simple: BNP members living in Cambridgeshire would rendezvous with Cambridge party representatives at the main railway station and then join local members and supporters at another location in the north of the city. Following a few drinks, the street team was to push out recruitment leaflets to the locals.

However, the day was not to go as planned. Just hours before the leafletting was due to take place, a dramatic development was to change everything. The city centre was plastered with anti-BNP posters calling for a mass demonstration to prevent the BNP carrying out its leaflet drive. In addition, hundreds of crudely printed anonymous leaflets were given out calling on students to "stop the Nazis marching in Cambridge!" (no march had been planned). The leaflet screamed: "The British National Party is coming to spread its racist filth in Cambridge. Let's tell them that they're not welcome here!"

One thing was certain, and that was that the small BNP team would be confronted by a large mob of student and left-wing demonstrators. The BNP would be heavily outnumbered. Should the activity be cancelled or postponed? Late on Friday afternoon a decision had to be taken, and taken quickly. Regional Organiser Richard Heaton decided that the activity would go ahead! A plan of action was drawn up and communicated rapidly to all concerned.

Shortly after mid-day on Saturday Cambridge Organiser Phil Douglas and two other members arrived at the railway station to redirect other members to the arranged meeting point. About 15 minutes later the three were recognised by the police, who demanded that they go straight home. No similar instructions were issued to the red mob who were gathering at the station, watched by a television crew who were hanging around like vultures waiting for a BNP-red confrontation.

But the reds were out of luck. The BNP had already assembled in a pub in the north of the city and were quietly downing their beers! The BNP trio drove away from the station passing a disgusting anti-British rabble of students, queers, anarchists and other vermin.

Meanwhile, back at the pub the BNP members were waiting for the return of the trio when Anglia TV News came in. The anti-BNP demo was the lead story and the reporter commented that hundreds of demonstrators were gathering in the city centre to stop the BNP. A few minutes later Phil Douglas and the others arrived back safely from the station.

At around 2 p.m. the BNP team left the pub. Bundles of stickers and leaflets were handed out. The flag was raised, and the team sprang into action, walking through the streets of the districts of Barnwell and Fen Ditton leafletting and putting up stickers. For nearly three hours the BNP team proceeded through the streets of Cambridge in this manner. It received a warm and friendly welcome from the locals. Some passing motorists even tooted their horns in support when they saw the flag.

One other great spin-off from the day's events was that huge local publicity was generated. For this the party owes a debt of gratitude to the opposition, for without them none of this would have happened.

In the words of Julius Caesar, we came, we saw and we conquered!

THE WELLING CLUB

Since our advertisement last month for the Welling Club, some members have been recruited — bringing the total to eight. It is small but it is a start. The Welling Club is open to any persons willing to donate £20 per month to the British National Party (they do not themselves have to be party members). In return they will receive periodic bulletins keeping them informed of the development of the party's resources and of future expansionist plans. Also they will be entertained free of charge at an annual dinner to be addressed by the BNP Chairman. Let's get some more recruits to the club this month!

GREEN LIGHT FOR THE UNDERWORLD?

steady descent into anarchy has been evident in our capital city and beyond ever since Lord Scarman, with government backing, laid down 'sensitive policing' as the new norm for inner-city ghetto areas following the 1981 Brixton riots.

But now the nation's burgeoning population of anti-social elements, militant aliens and assorted underclass misfits of every kind and colour seem to feel they have the freedom literally to get away with murder.

The kind of high-profile public priority given to the 'Tottenham Three' can only have spurred this feeling.

As might have been expected, their case was, to begin with, pushed mainly by elements belonging to the left-wing political gutter. Some three years ago militant student reds got Winston Silcott elected an honorary president of London University Students' Union. Then, too, not far behind them in getting in on the act, followed the professional spokesmen for the sewers of society in the Parliamentary Labour Party.

Finally, and perhaps less expected by some, the Tory Government obediently caved in to these pressures, allowing the appeal to go ahead. With the appeal court's quashing of the convictions, both the judicial system and the police have now been put in the pillory. The CID officer responsible for investigating the Blakelock murder faces prosecution for perverting the course of justice, and the likes of Silcott have been given the moral high ground.

Few normal people who take time to think about it will find the outcome of this affair satisfactory. Many will question whether the 'Tottenham Three' were worth all the agonised concern they were given. Leaving aside the vicious political motives at the root of the agitation on their behalf, Silcott for a start is hardly a person who would seem to have what many people would consider a deserving case.

On bail for another murder at the time of the Tottenham riot, he is due to remain in jail for four more years on the strength of his conviction for that. He seems, on any showing, to be a thoroughgoing thug.

There again, the question still hasn't been answered whether the three were actually involved in the riot itself. If so, then none of them is as innocent as they are currently being made to seem. It could be argued that if they were involved then, even if they didn't personally join in hacking PC Blakelock to death, they had a considerable degree of common purpose with those who did. That the law does not provide for this is a grave defect.

Blakelock's grieving widow says her husband "didn't stab himself forty times." But as things are those who did the stabbings, along with their fellow rioters, must obviously still be walking around in perfect liberty among Britain's law-abiding citizenry, presumably without a care in the world. For it seems unlikely that the exact culprits will ever be caught and made to carry the can for the killing. One reason for this is of course the reluctance of others at the scene of the murder to give evidence.

The whole 'Tottenham Three' scenario might almost have been contrived to give the underworld the idea that it's open season on Britain's cops. Perhaps the pre-Christmas massacre is symptomatic.

One thing is for sure. With police now set up as soft targets for the thug and the psychopath, no decent law-abiding Briton is safe. Above all, it is becoming obvious that the established powers in this country are concerned only to appease and pander to the gutter which produces such elements, and that nobody can look to them to take the kind of action necessary to remove this underworld from circulation.

Asian children but reflect a generally poor standard all round. The significance of this is that white pupils are found to suffer in schools where non-Whites comprise a large part of the pupil complement.

All in all, the tables certainly show that Labour-controlled areas are achieving results far inferior to those under other education authorities. But whether this is because of Labour control is another question. We would suggest that a much more important factor is the racial composition of the schools in the areas studied. But of course there will be no public debate about this because none will be allowed. After all, it might be bad for 'race relations'!

Stickers: great victory for BNP in court action

FRIDAY 13th is widely regarded as an unlucky day, a day on which misfortune strikes. Rochdale Council certainly now knows that this is true.

Last Autumn it was widely reported in the media that the council had successfully prosecuted Richard Edmonds, and through him the British National Party, for displaying 'unauthorised advertisements' on council property. These 'unauthorised advertisements' were stickers which said: "Love the white race" and displayed the BNP address, and which apparently had appeared on a council notice-board. Under an obscure law which had never before been enforced, and which was designed to stop large advertising hoardings being used without authorisation, Rochdale Council concocted an arrangement between its legal department and an agreeable local magistrate to have its successful prosecution brought, and the maximum fines and costs were awarded against Richard Edmonds as the manager of the BNP Bookshop, which distributes the stickers. This was reported in the media as a 'victory' over 'racist' stickers — even though the law makes no distinction over the content of any allegedly unauthorised advertisements! Of course, no effort was made to prosecute the various communist groups whose mostly unread posters litter the streets of many British cities. Similarly, no effort was made to prosecute the people who use flyposters to advertise pop concerts, and so on.

VULTURES GATHER

Immediately after the Rochdale magistrate had made his Solomon-like judgement, Labour and Tory councils the length and breadth of Britain began to line up like vultures ready to put in their own prosecutions, and they also set about persuading British Telecom, British Rail and other large bodies to do the same. However, they were not to get away with it!

An appeal was immediately put in to the local Crown Court in Bolton. Richard Edmonds was confident that unless the judge totally ignored the law (a not uncommon event in these times) it was certain that the BNP would be victorious. Under the law, the only person who can be prosecuted for such 'unauthorised advertisements' is the person who actually puts them up; neither the publishers nor distributors of such adverts can possibly be responsible for what another party does with them.

The date for the appeal was Friday, the 13th December. On the day, Rochdale Council's legal representative offered no evidence against either Richard Edmonds or the BNP. The judge immediately dismissed the case, but not before giving the shame-faced and cringing council-paid lackey a firm tongue-lashing. Furthermore, Rochdale Council was landed with the costs for launching its pathetic vendetta against the BNP. Of course, it will be the poll tax-payers of Rochdale who will ultimately foot the bill for the action, which will run to several thousands of pounds, whereas the just outcome would be for that bill to be presented personally to the officials responsible.

This was an important victory for the BNP. The party has served notice that it will not be intimidated!

Le Pen visit benefits BNP

THE VISIT to London of Jean-Marie Le Pen, leader of the French Front National, in early December has led to a marked upsurge in interest in the British National Party. The party's telephone lines were busy as new membership enquiries flooded in. BNP spokesmen were featured on several TV news programmes, including LWT's News Weekend as well as LBC Radio. Virtually all the 'quality' newspapers analysed the position of the BNP as the British equivalent of the Front National in France and the only force of any consequence in British Nationalism.

The main purpose of M. Le Pen's visit was to hold a conference with his Euro-MP colleagues. However, Britain's Tories, even the few nationalist-minded ones, were too frightened to meet the French leader. On the other hand, informal talks took place between BNP officials and members of his entourage.

At the dinner at which M. Le Pen spoke a well-produced English translation of Front National's policy statement was distributed. Not entirely surprisingly, this statement is very similar in content to the BNP's A New Way Forward.

A well-timed press statement from the BNP also prompted the media to announce its forthcoming general election campaign. It was widely reported that the campaign would be run on the theme of 'Rights for Whites', and prominence was given to party Chairman John Tyndall's candidature in the Bow & Poplar constituency. Indeed publicity was extensive in the East London Advertiser, Hackney Express and Docklands Recorder.

With the Front National riding high in France, the media have really woken up to the growing threat the BNP is presenting to the establishment in Britain.

ELECTION FUND

Contributions to the British National Party Election Fund over the past month have amounted to £539.60. This leaves us with a target of £2,871 to be raised. All monies to PO Box 117, Welling, Kent DA16 3DW.

THE 'DAY OF ACTION': AN EVENT THAT TAKES SOME BEATING

FEW ACTIVITIES promoted by the British National Party can beat the 'Day of Action' for effectiveness in publicising the party, impressing the public with its strength and keeping up the morale of party activists. The Day of Action which took place in Bermondsey, South London, in November (participants shown above) was an excellent example.

A Day of Action usually involves concentrating activists in a chosen area IN STRENGTH. Local members are joined by others who are brought in from adjacent areas within the region, so as to put on a show of numbers that will impress the public and (sometimes) achieve media publicity. During a Day of Action it is normal to conduct a mass paper-sale and also to saturate the area with leaflets. Banners and, especially, flags are usually carried to heighten the image.

The psychological importance of the strength factor cannot be stated with enough emphasis. Mr. and Mrs. Average Joe Public, before they will support something, want to feel assured that it is a real FORCE.

The Day of Action in Bermondsey was planned specifically with the object of raising the profile of the BNP in preparation for the general election, when the party will be contesting a seat there. The practice is strongly recommended for other areas where the BNP is also standing candidates.

Has there been a Day of Action in your area yet? If not, why not? If the BNP is fighting an election there it is time to get cracking!

What we stand for

- The establishment of a government of national unity that will put an end to nationally divisive party warfare; the return of leadership and statesmanship to British affairs.
- An end to immigration and a start to repatriation.
- British withdrawal from the Common Market
- The disbanding of the multi-racial Commonwealth and its replacement by a new Commonwealth of self-governing white states.
- British ownership and control of British industry and resources.
- Protection of British industry by the selective exclusion of foreign manufactured goods from the British market.
- An end to the financial swindle that causes inflation and slump, and its replacement by a sane and fair financial system that will give the people the purchasing power to buy the goods they produce.
- The subordination of the power of the City to the power of government, and the harnessing of the City to the needs of British industry.
- The regeneration of British farming, with the object of achieving the maximum possible self-sufficiency in food production.
- Rejection of both the poll tax and its substitute, the new 'property tax', and a return to the old rates system, though with fairer rebates allowing for differences in income and in the numbers occupying properties.
- A healthy environment for a healthy people — the protection of our countryside and an end to the architectural disfigurement of our towns and cities.
- Tougher treatment of criminals, including the return of the death penalty.
- A return to traditional methods of education, with stronger discipline in the classroom and the sacking of 'trendy' teachers.
- An alternative defence strategy: withdrawal from NATO, closure of all foreign military and air bases in Britain, the strengthening of Britain's defences and a position of armed neutrality.
- An end to overseas aid and the allocation of the money saved to the financing of repatriation and greater help for the needy at home.
- The crushing of the IRA, the termination of the Anglo-Irish Agreement and firm support for the loyalist majority in Northern Ireland.
- Repeal of the laws permitting homosexuality and abortion (except where the latter is the result of rape or necessary on medical grounds), the wiping out of AIDS and a return to healthy moral values aimed at strengthening the family and community.
